

Resources to help you understand and witness to Muslims

EXCELLENT, easy-to-read overview of Islam and Christianity, witnessing, etc.

This website has a series of articles, links and resources all written in a way that does not assume you have any prior understanding or background. A good starting point for understanding.

More scholarly, intellectual approach, very detailed--a list of articles about Islam from The Christian Research Institute

Using the Qur'an and the Hadith (traditional saying, verbal history of Mohammed) as a Bridge for Sharing the Gospel

An excellent, though lengthy article—here is a quote from it:

"Very few Muslims will deny the authority of the hadith, and no true Muslim can deny the authority of the Qur'an. Based on this syllogism, we can encourage Muslims to read for themselves what God had said in His earlier revelations.

We can also point out to Muslims that since they accept the hadith as authoritative, although they are never specifically spoken of in the Qur'an, how much more should the Taurat (Torah) and the Injil (Gospel) be received and accepted, which are spoken of repeatedly in the Qur'an?"

Textual foundation for evaluating the truth of spiritual teachings

<http://livelifebythebook.com/2011/08/13/textual-foundation-for-evaluating-the-truth-of-spiritual-teachings/>

Before you can evaluate the truth of any religion, you need to start with the historical accuracy of their primary documents.

This link will take you to a study of how we can trust the truth of the Bible. All religious writings do not teach the same thing. You must know that you can trust what the Bible teaches to have a starting point for discussion. This overview article has links to these online videos:

Canonicity #1, How we got our Old Testament AND what makes the Bible different than other religious books

Canonicity #2: In between the Old and New Testament and what about the Apocrypha?

Canonicity #3: About the New Testament and the Gnostic Gospels

Canonicity #4: How the church decided what books were included in the Bible

In addition to these lessons the site <http://www.livelifebythebook.com> has additional ones on the differences between the Islamic and Christian view of Abraham and Jesus.
